PREPARING AN ACTIVITY LIST FOR YOUR COLLEGE APPLICATION

While a student’s academic record—courses, grades, and test scores—is the most important factor in admission to college, activities and interests may play a key role. In fact, at some colleges, a student’s record beyond the classroom will determine whether he or she is admitted. In general, the more competitive the college, the more important the non-academic record becomes. Why? Competitive colleges—schools admitting less than fifty percent of their applicants—have so many well qualified candidates that they will likely look at involvement beyond the classroom when crafting a freshmen class. On the other hand, most public universities base their decisions largely, though not necessarily exclusively, on the academic record. Therefore, students with a college prep curriculum, and acceptable grades, and test scores will usually be admitted. The same considerations hold true for less selective private colleges and universities. (Exceptions to this rule include national “flagships,” such as the Universities of Michigan and Virginia.) The great majority of Edina High School students who apply to public universities, private comprehensive universities and liberal arts colleges will be admitted if they meet the school’s academic selection criteria.

Again, the non-academic record is vital when applying to more selective schools. With all their competitive applicants, it is paramount that you give a full account of your extracurricular record. These types of colleges will naturally expect an excellent—or with the most competitive schools, an outstanding—record in a strong program of studies. They will then look for other talents that you can contribute to the college’s community. As Michelle Hernandez puts it in Acing the College Application: “strong academics open the door while a substantial talent may get you in.”

How do I let the colleges know about my interests and talents? Most schools will have a chart to fill out and/or questions to be answered. The increasingly popular Common Application, used by about 300 colleges, also asks for activities, including years and extent of commitment. Unfortunately, while space for additional comments is available, the Common Application’s chart doesn’t offer suitable space to describe the activity. The same holds true with the regular applications of many colleges.

The response of many students to this situation is often a resume. In most instances, this is the wrong approach. To begin with, some students will start the resume with an educational goal or objective. Now, for a job application this makes sense, but it distracts from a college application. Of even more questionable value, many student resumes will list such items as courses, gpa, and test scores. This information should already be on other parts of the application and is thus redundant. A resume should not repeat what is in other parts of the application.

What is a better approach? An Activity List. Start by listing all activities, hobbies, interests, awards, employment, summer experiences, etc. According to this list, you then might follow one of two paths. The first path is organizing an Activity List into several categories. Students who are involved in a variety of activities should take this path. Here are some examples. Sally Springer and Marion Franck in Admissions Matters suggest:

- Extracurricular Activities (including athletics)
- Awards and Honors
- Hobbies and Special Interests
- Summer Activities
- Work Experiences and Internships
- Community Involvement
- Athletics
- Leadership
- Athletics
- Community Service
- Religion
- School Sponsored Activities
- Employment
- Athletic Activities
- Activities Beyond School

Now, here are some other categories used by recent Edina High School graduates in preparation of their Activity List:

Student A:
- Music Activities
- Academic Enrichment Activities
- Work Experiences
- Community Service
- Athletics

Student B:
- Publications
- Leadership
- Athletics
- Community Service

Student C:
- School Sponsored Activities
- Employment
- Athletic Activities
- Activities Beyond School
Preparing an Activity List

1. After forming categories, place them in order of importance.

2. Then arrange a chart which includes:
   - Activity
   - Years of involvement, including number of hours per week
   - Position(s) held
   - Brief description of activity

3. Be selective in choosing activities:
   - Include only activities participated in during high school. Given that Edina is a 10-12 high school, an activity that was participated in during 9th grade may also be included, especially if it was an interest built on throughout high school.
   - List activities in order of importance. If involvement in an activity was only for a short period of time, leave it out. A long list, which includes several activities with minor participation, is unhelpful.

4. Preparing a description of an activity
   - Concentrate on giving an informative, succinct description of key activities. Use clear terminology that admissions counselors will understand. Use everyday vocabulary, and spell out abbreviations.
   - Describe the activity briefly, unless it is something that is common knowledge. Then, write a concise description of your personal contribution to the activity, especially if you played a substantial role in developing or leading it. Use active verbs to describe these contributions. In addition include any awards or honors earned in the activity (you may want to include a separate category for awards/honors).
   - Don’t repeat your essay. Both the Activity List and essay offer a chance to highlight accomplishments. However, try not to repeat information. If a lot of time is spent talking about activities in your essay, then there is no need to describe them deeply in the Activity List (and vice versa). It is okay to mention something in both places, but there is no need to go into great detail more than once. (source: www.csocollegecenter.org, Click on ask the experts).

What if I have very few school or community activities? Sometimes, the need to work or family responsibilities make it difficult to become very involved in activities. Employment can be turned to a student’s advantage. Example: I once worked with a student with very few activities, but whose father ran homes for young adults with developmental disabilities. The student worked a good number of hours each week and assumed many responsibilities for this service. In addition, hobbies may also be included when filling out an Activities List. On another occasion, I worked with a student who had totally rebuilt a car engine. Another example: when I was working at the University of Minnesota, I read an application for a student from a small town in a rural part of the state who created his own web designs. I had his website evaluated by computer gurus within admissions at the University, who were very impressed with the student’s talent. Even though his grades were lower than what the U wanted, he was accepted.

What if I focused on only one main activity or interest? There is another approach to describing activities or interests. Let’s say you are involved in several activities, but one clearly stands out. You have been deeply committed to it for many years, and your accomplishments are particularly noteworthy. In this situation, you could focus the admissions staff’s attention largely on this one activity. At many very competitive colleges, one exceptionally well developed talent can lead to an acceptance. An entire activity part of the application can be filled with this approach. An interest, let’s say music, can also be mentioned with reference to the attached
Activity Sheet. In Making It Into A Top College by Howard and Matthew Greene, the authors describe the main categories for a student with extensive music-related experience:

Training
   Voice Lessons
   Piano Lessons
Dance
   School Singing Groups
   Musical State Productions
   Music in the Community

As described above, the years of involvement, hours per week/month and description of the activities for each of the categories could then be added. In this case, the student might briefly describe her objectives in studying music at the college.

This type of Activity List is also appropriate for a student who wants to play intercollegiate athletics in a college. Because this type of Activity List can also be sent to coaches, a brief academic profile can also be added, including nature of curriculum, gpa, and class rank.

Please note: An Activity List does not replace completing the activities section of an application, including the Common Application. Rather, briefly fill in the activities section, and at the end state “please see attached Activity List.” Or, if you apply online, indicate that you will send a paper copy to admissions office.

Additional Suggestions

1. Put your name and social security number at the top of each page.
2. Be selective when including activities in the Activity List. Only an extraordinary background calls for more than two pages--strive to be compact and neat.
3. If an application gives sufficient room to name and describe activities, an Activity List is not needed.
4. If an application is submitted online, an Activity List should be sent by mail. Ask that it be included in your file. Increasingly, these materials will be electronically scanned to be read by an admissions officer.
5. Do NOT use colored paper for an Activity List. (In fact, completely avoid the use of colored paper in any materials. They may be scanned for computer reading and will not be picked up well.)
6. Use 10 font or above. Remember an admissions counselor may be reading your list at night. Use margins-white space is appealing.
7. Avoid organizing Activity Lists by grades. Also, in most cases the chart form is a better format than long paragraphs to present activities.
8. Have someone proofread the Activity List for misspellings, grammar, or even an activity that may have been left out.

Here is a sample Activity List. The ideas for these categories and activities have been drawn from lists of Edina graduates from the past three or four years to give you an idea of how to put together your own list. As you will note, we have made some changes; for example dates. They do not represent the activities of one individual.

In writing this piece, ideas were drawn heavily from Michelle Hernandez’s Acing the College Application (Ballantine, 2002). Suggestions from Making It Into a Top College (Harper Collins, 2000) by Howard and Matthew Greene, Admission Matters (Jossey-Bass, 2005) by Sally Springer and Marion Franck and the website, College Center (www.csocollegecenter.org) were also helpful.

| CONNECTING WITH KIDS: INTERGENERATIONAL DIALOGUE BOARD | March 2004-present | Board Member | Connecting With Kids: Intergenerational Dialogue Board is a community board that focuses on how adults of all generations can connect with kids. One of my teachers recommended that I participate in a forum for the board in February 2003. Because of my ideas on creating a community youth board in Edina, they asked me if I would serve on the board. My responsibilities are to assist in implementing 14 actions that will allow adults to better connect with kids in the city of Edina, Minnesota. |
